INTRODUCTION

One of the most difficult and time-consuming chores facing potential HERO System GMs, particularly those running Fantasy Hero games, is the need to create spells for the campaign. Unless the GM is willing to let the players create their characters' spells, he has to go to considerable effort to design the spells characters can choose.

To help the GM with this task, The HERO System Grimoire presents thousands of pre-generated spells in a wide variety of categories — alchemy, necromancy, divine magic, and more. If you can't find the spell you want in this book, you can easily use its contents as guidelines for designing your own spells.

Spell Categories

For ease of reference, The HERO System Grimoire divides spells into 28 categories, or “arcana,” based on special effect, common use among gamers and in fiction, and so forth:

Alchemy, the Art of creating potions, elixirs, and the like by mixing and activating various substances and, in the process, unlocking the magical essences within them.

Arcanomancy, spells pertaining to magic, fundamental magical forces, and spellcasting.

Areomancy, also known as Battle Magic, spells for use in warfare.

Black Magic, spells that invoke evil energies or which spellcasters use for particularly evil ends.

Chaos Magic, the wizardry of the powerful but unpredictable force called Chaos.

Conjuration, the Art of summoning beings from this and other planes of existence, and of controlling and banishing them.

Cybermancy, magic dealing with machines, technology, and related phenomena.

Divination, the Art of finding and foretelling.

Divine Magic, the sacred and holy spells cast by priests, paladins, and other characters associated with the gods.

Druidry, spells relating to, using, or affecting animals, plants, and nature in general.

Elemental Magic, spells related to the four classical Elements — Air, Earth, Fire, and Water — as well as “lesser” substances or phenomena sometimes regarded as “Elements” in gaming settings (such as Ice and Light).

Enchantment, the Art of casting spells through enchanted items.

Monster Magic, spells learned and cast by various types of monsters.

Naming Magic, spells that derive their power from the caster's knowledge of the target's True Name.

Necromancy, magic pertaining to life, death, undeath, and related subjects, usually considered a black and evil Art.

Oriental Sorcery, magics derived from Asian occultism, folklore, myth, and philosophy.

Professional Magic, spells that adventurers and everyday folk in High Fantasy campaigns use to make their jobs easier and safer.

Rune Magic, the magic of carved and painted runes of power.

Shamanism, magic involving spirits and the Spirit World.

Song Magic, spells cast by or involving singing, poetry, jests, and the like.

Sorcery, magics of the mind, thought, illusion, and deception, regarded by many with suspicion and fear.

Superheroic Thaumaturgy, the body of common spells known to mystics in the Champions Universe setting.

Thaumaturgy, the Art of transforming, altering, and redirecting energies and matter, including shapeshifting and related spells.

Theurgy, magics pertaining to Divine and Infernal powers, and to the celestial bodies of the night sky.

Voodoo, fictional magics based on the mystic/religious practices of Voodoo.

Warrior-Magery, spells that enhance characters' ability to fight in melee combat.

Witchcraft, an Art combining various lesser aspects of other arts, such as Alchemy, Conjuration, Druidry, Elemental Magic, and Necromancy, as well as hedge magics and other “low spells,” but no less powerful than the other arcana for all that.

Wizardry, a catch-all term for magic and spellcasting in general, but also used to refer to any spells or bodies of mystic lore not a part of any other arcana, such as spells of general utility (e.g., spells that detect or dispel magic), naming-magic, spells of sheer mystic power, and the like.
